

The following are the Journal of Toxicology and Regulatory Policies' (JTRP) principles of transparency and best practices to ensure rigor, integrity, and accessibility in the publication process:

1. Open Access Policy: The research articles are freely available online to all readers immediately upon publication, promoting global access to knowledge.
2. Peer Review Transparency: The peer review process, including the criteria used for evaluation, the identities of reviewers (if possible), and the timeline for review are clearly outlined.
3. Conflict of Interest Disclosure: Authors, reviewers, and editors will disclose any potential conflicts of interest that could influence the research or publication process.
4. Data Sharing and Reproducibility: The authors will be encouraged to make their data openly available whenever possible and to provide detailed methodologies to facilitate reproducibility of the research.
5. Authorship Criteria: There are clear guidelines for authorship attribution, ensuring that all contributors who meet the criteria are acknowledged appropriately.
6. Plagiarism Detection: We will implement robust plagiarism detection tools to uphold originality standards and prevent academic misconduct.
7. Transparency in Corrections and Retractions: We will clearly communicate any corrections, retractions, or editorial expressions of concern, maintaining transparency and accountability in the publication process.
8. Editorial Independence: Editors will operate independently from any undue influence, whether commercial, political, or personal, to uphold the integrity and objectivity of the journal.
9. Diversity and Inclusion: Diversity and inclusion is promoted in authorship, editorial boards, and peer reviewers to ensure a wide range of perspectives and minimize biases.
10. Continuous Improvement: We will regularly evaluate and update publication practices to adapt to evolving standards, technological advancements, and community feedback.
11. Accessibility: The published content will be accessible to readers with disabilities by providing alternative formats and adhering to accessibility standards.
12. Clear Ethical Guidelines: Authors will be provided with clear ethical guidelines, including standards for research involving human subjects, animals, and other sensitive topics.

By adhering to these principles, the Journal of Toxicology and Regulatory Policy can maintain credibility, foster trust among researchers and readers, and contribute to the advancement of knowledge in their respective fields.
